

Giovanni Melina is the deputy division chief of the Structural and Climate Policy division of the IMF's Research Department. He also worked in the IMF's African Department and, before joining the Fund, he was an Associate Professor at City University London. His research focuses on the design of monetary and fiscal policies, climate economics, and structural issues.