

Athanasios Vamvakidis

Athanasios Vamvakidis is the IMF Resident Representative in Croatia since 2004. Before this assignment, he was working in the European Department of the IMF, covering the South European region, including Italy, Greece, Slovenia and Cyprus. He joined the IMF in 1997, and after spending a year at the Research Department, he moved to the Asian Department, where he worked for the Philippines and Indonesia during the East Asian financial crisis. His professional experience also includes internships in the World Bank and in the Harvard Institute of International Development, and teaching assignments at Harvard University in International Economics and Finance. He holds a BA in Economics from the University of Macedonia in Thessaloniki, Greece and a Master and a PhD. in Economics from Harvard University. His research interests include international trade and spillover effects and the empirics of economic growth. He has published extensively in all major journals in his field.